Calls to Action

The call to action (CTA) is an important element of marketing strategies and sales copy. The purpose of the call to action is to motivate readers or listeners to take a specific action you suggest. The action frequently helps your target readers solve a problem, as well as gets them into your conversion or sales funnel. However, they must click your call to action link, first.

To convince and compel the reader to act, the words in your copy and your call to action must be effective. The most effective words vary from niche to niche and even among audience segments within a niche. This is because the reader's motivation is a major factor.

But, effective calls to action include specific words, phrases, and/or images that grab attention, evoke a strong emotion, create a sense of urgency, persuade them to try something, remove or reduce risk (build trust), empower or inspire the reader, etc. In addition, effective calls to action are easily viewed; appear multiple times, are highly relative and motivational. Above all, they clearly and specifically state the action you want them to take.
